It is noted that the main engines in these vessels have been constructed under the supervision of the American Bureau of Shipping, but that they have subsequently been opened up and examined by the Society's Surveyors.

It is submitted the New York Surveyors be requested to state whether there is any specific reason for this additional work to be entailed.

In the case of vessels built in the U.K. in which the main engines or boilers have been constructed to British Corporation Class it has not been the practice to ask for any opening up for examination by the Society's Surveyors.
